An efficient method to generate and quantify the reactive intermediate, 3-hydroxy-1-naphthaldehyde (3HN), in naphthoquinone mixtures. We have developed a method to generate and quantify the reactive intermediate, 3-hydroxy-1-naphthaldehyde (3HN), in naphthoquinone mixtures. 3HN is formed during the oxidation of naphthoquinones to naphthoquinone quinones with 3-hydroxyanthranilic acid as a mediator. The method involves trapping the 3HN in a solution of di(2-ethylhexyl)sebacate (DEHS) and measuring the resulting conjugate by high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). The method is fast, convenient and produces acceptable recovery levels. Using this method, naphthoquinone quinones formed by the microsomal oxidation of naphthoquinones were shown to react with 3-hydroxyanthranilic acid to form 3HN. In the case of naphthoquinone 1,4-dione, the calculated rate of formation of 3HN from naphthoquinone 1,4-dione quinone was 0.066 min^{-1} and the overall yield of 3HN was approximately 20%. The 3HN-DEHS conjugate was shown to inhibit the Ehrlich ascites carcinoma (EAC) tumor cell line and this inhibition could be prevented by preincubating the tumor cells with 3-hydroxyanthranilic acid.

Journalism's Problems with Women There is an uncomfortable amount of hypocrisy around the supposed cultural necessity of "fixing" the gender imbalance in the media. Maybe it's an unhealthy need to feel comfort and safety with someone who looks like you, someone who has a similar life, or maybe it's just the ease of having a way to talk to women without having to look them in the eye, but there is an overwhelming amount of support for the concept of quotas and affirmative action in journalism. A 2014 article by the New York Times had the following paragraph under the headline "One-fifth of the New York Times Company's Board of Directors
