audio support - New! Login screen support Full-screen, colorful interface The application wraps its features in a visually appealing interface that by default covers your whole screen. This comes in handy as it can stretch on large monitors and truly enhance the karaoke experience. You can also switch to a windowed mode, with sadly no option to toggle an external one to act as a display while the main window to be used as a control panel and playlist manager. Quick and easy playlist setup At its core, the application is pretty straightforward, with most effort on your behalf being to keep up with the song, on the technical side, a few clicks being enough to select the song and make it play. However, there are various customization options available to make the whole experience suit the party theme, as well as the song genre. Large palette of customization options In terms of functionality, you can quickly bring up the Windows microphone configuration screen by pressing a dedicated button, adjust song volume, speed, as well as pitch. On the other hand, the background and text can fully suffer from your wild ideas. A large variety of video files can be loaded to loop play in the background for visual support, or choose from several included preset animations. The font is fully customizable as well, with the possibility to set size, color and type, and even the “bouncing ball”.

A few last words All things considered, Sing-Magic Karaoke Player is one of the main ingredients you might want to add so that your party is a success. It's easy enough to use and the abundance of customization options make sure it perfectly blends in with any theme or genre. What better way to be sure of its powers than taking it out for a spin? JavaScript | Can you use an object as a property and use it in a foreach loop in this way? Ok so if I have an object like this `var obj = { "name" : "Sunny", "friends" : [ "John", "Mary" ] }` and then I want to iterate through the friends property of the object in a for each loop, is this possible? Basically what I want to do is, if I could somehow iterate through the "friends" object property in the for each loop, I could access each friends `item.name` with `obj.friends.name`, etc. A: Just don't add friends to the object, it will take a list of names: `var obj = { name: "Sunny", friends: ["John", "Mary"] }` For fun, you can create an object and add "toJSON()" to it: var obj = { name: "Sunny", friends: ["John", "Mary"] }; obj.toJSON = function () { return obj; }; console.log(obj); jsFiddle. Note that this won't work with older browsers. UASF: The Scene Is Set to Explode We're back to the basics, with a look at how things will play out in the events of the next few months.
